WASHINGTON MAY LOSE THE SHOPS

Chief of B. & O. S-W. Police Declares This May Be Done to Settle Strike.

SITUATION BECOMING SERIOUS

Strikers Agree to Return to Work if All Employees are Re-instated.

E. W. Boileaux, chief of the B. & O. S-W. police department, is responsible for the statement that unless the strike at Washington is settled at once, the shops will be moved from that city. The situation is becoming serious, and the company as well as the strikers would like to see a satisfactory agreement.

While the strike is in progress the company has been operating its engines at a disadvantage, and this is the cause of the delay in the schedule time of the majority of the trains. It is said that the engines are in bad condition and cannot maintain a regular speed while on the road. Many of the engineers have been required to spend considerable time upon their engines while on the road, so that the trains can be taken over the road.

The merchants at Washington refuse to sell anything whatever to the strike breakers who are required to make all their purchases from the company. At the shops the meals are furnished at the expense of the company and the strike breakers seldom leave the shops. The strike at Washington was not the result of any direct difficulty concerning the wage scale, but was a sympathetic strike, the men leaving their employment because of a disagreement on another division.

It was rumored some time ago that the company was contemplating the movement of the shops, but this is the first time any official statement has been made. If the shops should be removed from that place, it would mean a loss of over five hundred inhabitants and of a pay roll of thousands of dollars each month. The movement of the shops would be the last resort to settle the strike, as the road has much money invested in property and building, which would have to be replaced in some other city if the change was made.

Engineers and trainmen say that the officers of the road now are frequently mentioning the matter and they urge that some outside source intervene to bring about a settlement. It is asserted that the strikers offered a proposition to General Superintendent Hair to the effect that the men would return to work if the company would reinstate the strikers as to age limit and in the benefit rank. This the officers agreed to do with a few exceptions, and now the strikers are holding out that all may be reinstated. Some of the men are going back to work.

MANUSCRIPT MONEY.

Surplus in Fund for Work on Teachers' Examination Papers.

Figures compiled in the office of Robert J. Aley, state superintendent of public instruction, shows that a balance of $2,000 in the state manuscript fund is in the hands of the superintendent after paying all expenses incident to the grading of manuscripts from persons seeking state licenses during the first half of this year. The total receipts for the period, amounting to $5,170, are distributed by months as follows: January, $870; February, $760; March, $766; April, $1,075; May, $810; June, $879. The expense of grading the manuscripts amounted to $3,170.

During the six months 6,709 manuscripts were received and of this number 3,807 graded sufficiently high for the applicants to receive state licenses. This percentage of success, approximately 58, is found to correspond to the percentage of success among applicants where the manuscripts are graded by the county superintendents.

There will be two more examinations this year and Mr. Aley estimates that the fees received at that time will be sufficient to pay all expenses of the manuscript department for the remainder of the year, leaving the net income for the department for the twelve months at approximately $2,000.

Will Teach in Springfield.

Allen Foster went to North Vernon this morning to take the examination for a teachers' license. Mr. Foster has accepted a position as instructor of history and physical geography in the high school at Springfield, Ill., and will leave in a short time for that place.

S. I. COMPANY TO BE REORGANIZED

Big Bond Issue for $2,500,000 Will Be Used for Improvement of Service.

PLACES ORDER FOR EQUIPMENT

Announced that Myron J. Carpenter Will Be President of the New Company.

Final arrangements have been made to take the Southern Indiana Railway Company out of the hands of the receivers, and by means of a bond issue of $2,500,000 take up the present $400,000 receivers' certificates, which are outstanding. This will furnish new working capital and provide the officials to make many improvements upon the road, which have been needed for better service.

It was understood some time ago that such a move was contemplated by the bondholders, and that they intended to purchase the road when it was offered at auction sale, as ordered by the federal court. The dispatch from Chicago says that Myron J. Carpenter will be the president of the new company, as was stated by this paper several weeks ago. Under the management of Mr. Carpenter the road has been very prosperous and has enjoyed an increasing business. The traffic at the present time is the heaviest in the history of the road and the officials are unable to handle their shipments as rapidly as they desire on account of the shortage in equipment. In this connection, however, it is said that the receiver has placed several large orders for new equipment since the bondholders decided to reorganize the company. It is expected that the announcement of the reorganization will be made public by the officials within a short time, as all the signatures necessary to consummate the deal have been secured and that one will be obtained today.

Although a large part of the bonds and certificates are held by Chicago clearing house banks, an Eastern syndicate, it is said, will underwrite the issue of bonds. Following the underwriting of the bonds, the road will be offered for sale and bid in by the present bondholders. A board of directors will then be voted, officers elected and work at once started on whipping the system into shape.

The reorganization committee having the present project in hand is composed of one member each from the prospective committee of the Chicago Southern and a similar committee representing the Southern Indiana, a representative from the Clearing House banks and a member representing the St. Louis and New York interests.

There will be a sixty-day notice before the sale of the road is made.

Several railroad companies would like to own the Southern Indiana, it is said, and had the plan for reorganization failed the bidding for the property would have doubtless have been spirited.

He said he came to Seymour with his brother, who had been sick, and was on his way to his home in Jennings county.

He got his "booze" in Columbus. It was his first arrest, he said, and would be his last.

L. F. MILLER HOME.

Rain Needed in Northern Indiana An Auto Accident.

Leroy Miller returned today from a business trip through Stark, Marshall and other northern Indiana counties, and reports a great need of rain in that section. In some places they have had but one good rain since the middle of June. Mr. Miller was near Aetna Green at the time a bad automobile accident occurred, which resulted in the death of three persons and the serious injury of another. He saw the bodies of the victims some after the tragedy. The parties were from Ohio and had been touring the West for several months. They were en route home and had expected to reach there the day of the accident. The party was run down at a railroad crossing in a deep ravine.

Mrs. Lena Gresham, of Clinton, Miss., Has a Few Facts to Tell Our Readers About Cardui.

Clinton, Miss.—"Thanks to Cardui," writes Mrs. Lena Gresham, of this place, "I have been greatly relieved."

"I suffered for three years from female inflammation, and had taken medicine from four different physicians without much benefit."

Just try Cardui. That's all we ask. It speaks for itself. It has helped so many thousands, it must be able to help you.

Trying Cardui won't hurt you. It is safe, harmless, gentle in action, and purely vegetable.

FACTS COMING OUT

Details of Illinois Central Graft Cases Told on Witness Stand.

Chicago, July 29.—"High officials of the Illinois Central railroad who were interested in car repairing plants entered into an agreement among themselves to divide profits grafted from the railroad. These profits amounted to as high as 40 per cent of the total amount paid by the road. That is the charge made on the witness stand by Harold A. Sims in his testimony before Master in Chancery Roswell B. Mason in the suit of the railroad to recover $300,000 from the Memphis Car company."

Although he was on the "inside" and knew in detail the method used to rob the railroad, Sims says that he realized only $750 for his share in the work. Illinois Central lumber was used to repair Illinois Central cars and then the road was charged for the lumber, he said. Cars loaded with material were shipped to the Memphis Car Repair company, and it was the practice to charge for repairs made on the cars, whether they were made or not, the witness said, and more often they were not.

EVANGELIST'S PERIL

"Sailor Bob" Clark Victim of Attack by Drunken Stranger.

Champaign, Ill., July 29.—Sailor Bob Clark, an evangelist of the Methodist Episcopal church, was attacked by a drunken man while riding on an interurban car between Danville and Champaign. The stranger advanced on the revival leader with a large knife and was in the act of driving it into the side of the venerable preacher when Conductor Dowling and another passenger floored him.

The trouble arose out of the action of the aggressor in removing the belongings of Sailor Bob from two seats and sitting down in one of them. The Rev. Mr. Clark remonstrated in vain. He then told the intruder what he thought of him, and the attack followed. The man escaped by jumping through a window when the car stopped for a railroad crossing.

DESTRUCTIVE FLOOD

Much Damage Reported by Reason of Continued Rain in Kentucky.

Hawesville, Ky., July 29.—Nearly every bridge in Hancock county was carried away, many miles of public highway rendered impassable and the Louisville, Henderson & St. Louis railroad washed out in many places as a result of a twelve-hour rain. Lightning destroyed the station of the railway company at Lewisburg, and a large chair factory at Tell City, across the Ohio river. Many homes along streams throughout the county have been abandoned. The loss to livestock is reported heavy.

Will Increase Capital Stock.

Louisville, July 29.—The special meeting of the stockholders of the Fidelity Trust Company, at which a plan to increase the capital of the company from $1,000,000 to $2,000,000 will be considered, will be held August 18. At the meeting the stockholders will be asked to approve the plan to issue $1,000,000 additional stock so that the shortage caused by the speculations of August Ropke, now in jail, may be overcome.

Rawn's Millions Mythical.

Chicago, July 29.—Instead of being a millionaire, Ira G. Rawn, president of the Monon road, who was found shot to death in his summer home, died possessed of an estate valued at only $120,000. At least, so a petition filed by his widow declares. The will was promptly admitted to probate. Mrs. Rawn was appointed executrix.

ONE WAS KILLED IN SUGAR DOCK RIOTS

Bloody Clash With Strikers In New York.

New York, July 29.—Things came to a bloody pass between the American Sugar Refining company at their refining plant on South Third street in Williamsburg and the 1,500 strikers who have been harrying the works since they walked out ten days ago, when the strikers, desperate Poles and Lithuanians and Russians, fought a small handful of special policemen and a smaller squad of regular members of the police force up and down Kent avenue for nearly an hour. In the end one of the strikers was picked up nearly dead—he died a few minutes after he reached a hospital, from a gunshot wound in the abdomen—seven men were seriously wounded, and a score carried wounds to the back rooms of their tenements, evading the police.

Henry A. Morgan, the cashier of the refinery, who succeeded James F. Bender, the convicted official, in the post at the Williamsburg works, was arrested after the riots, charged with the killing of the Polish striker. Morgan was released on $5,000 bail.

The trouble was caused by the sugar refinery people attempting to move some sugar from the works for distribution among the local dealers in Brooklyn and New York.

Streetcar Riots at Columbus Too Much For Local Police.

Columbus, O., July 29.—For the first time since the Baltimore & Ohio road strike trouble in 1887, Ohio's capital has been invaded by militia called for riot duty. Two thousand soldiers, under command of General McMaken of Toledo, are camped here today pursuant to a call issued by Mayor Marshall, who after four days of intermittent rioting incident to the streetcar strike, declared his police force exhausted and no longer able to cope with the situation. Governor Harmon is expected to arrive from his summer home at Charlevoix, Mich., this afternoon. W. D. Mahon, international president of the streetcar men's union, is directing the contest for the men. The union went on strike late in April because it claimed the Columbus Railway and Light company was discharging all men suspected of belonging to the union. An increase in pay also was asked.

STATE CONVENTION OF NEW THIRD PARTY

Pennsylvania Seeking to Throw Off Boss Rule.

Philadelphia, July 29.—A convention without a boss, the state convention of the new third party, sat in this city and produced as its campaign offering a ticket headed with the name of ex-State Treasurer William H. Berry of Delaware county, for the governorship. Keystone party is the title adopted by the independents.

Berry's associates on the ticket are: For lieutenant governor, D. Clarence Gibboney, president of the Philadelphia Law and Order Society; state treasurer, Cornelius D. Scully, lawyer, of Pittsburgh; secretary of internal affairs, John J. Casey, former legislator, representative of labor, and author of state employers' liability law, of Wilkesbarre. Berry and Casey are Democrats; Gibboney and Scully Republicans. There was no doubt about the boss, the usual attachment of a political convention, being an absent quantity when the Keystone party was given life, declared its purposes and put forward its nominees.

The country delegates supported Berry almost solidly, and the nomination went to him on the first ballot over Rudolph Blankenberg of this city and ex-Mayor George A. Guthrie of Pittsburgh, independents of state-wide reputation and unquestioned standing.

Millington, had his hopes rudely blasted in the Herkimer county primaries held last night in the various towns. Robinson was soundly beaten by the regular Republican organization, and he will go into tomorrow's convention, at which delegates to the congressional convention will be chosen, with only about twenty of the sixty-six delegates pledged to his support. It now appears beyond all question that Millington will go back to Washington for another term and Mr. Robinson will return to his farm.

HYDROPHOBIA

Causes Death of Cow Which Was Bitten by Mad Dog.

A cow belonging to Ira Cribb, who lives near this city, died of hydrophobia Friday night. The animal was bitten by a mad dog about nine weeks
ago, but apparently did not suffer
from the effects until Friday morning. Dr. J. H. Carter, secretary of the city board of health, was informed of the case and ordered that none of the milk from the herd of cows belonging to Mr. Crabb be placed on the market.

Rev. Loren Edwards.

This morning's Indianapolis Star
contained a good picture of Rev. L.
M. Edwards, a brother of J. C. Edwards, teacher in the Seymour high school. Rev. Mr. Edwards was married in this city in 1905 to Miss Florence Sargent, daughter of Dr. Sargent, at that time pastor of the Methodist church. The Star said:

"The Rev. Loren M. Edwards, pastor of the First M. E. church of Portland, Ind., will deliver the morning
sermon Sunday at the Meridian Street
M. E. church. In his boyhood the Rev. Mr. Edwards attended the Manual Training high school of this city
during the pastorate of his father,
the Rev. Dr. C. C. Edwards, at Edwin Ray M. E. church and earned money
as a newspaper carrier to pursue his higher education at Moores Hill College and Drew Theological Seminary.
He is a graduate of both institutions. Since his college days he has filled pastorates at Noblesville, Ft.
Wayne and Portland, his present field.

Several Indiana Bankers In Line for Parole.

BOARD TO MEET IN AUGUST

Under Provisions of an Act of the Late
Congress Three Hoosier Bankers
Are Looking Forward to Release
From Imprisonment in the Federal Prison at Fort Leavenworth—Roll of Indiana Bankers Now Doing Time.

Indianapolis, July 20.—As the result of the parole law passed at the last session of congress, three Indiana
bankers who are now in the Fort Leavenworth federal prison are eligible to parole. Whether they will be paroled remains to be seen. The parole board provided for by the law will hold its first meeting in August. United States District Attorney Charles W. Miller said he did not know of any movement
on foot at the present time to have these men paroled.

The three men who are eligible and who were sentenced for violation of the national banking laws are Justus L. Brodick, former president of the Indiana National bank of Elkhart, who was sentenced April 21, 1904, to serve ten years; Gustav A. Conzman, former cashier of the Vigo County National bank of Terre Haute, who was sentenced Jan. 29, 1906, to serve eight years, and Fred Lubbe, former cashier
of the First National bank of Dillsboro,
who was sentenced June 12, 1908, to serve five years.

Mr. Miller points out that the new parole act provides that every prisoner
convicted of an offense against the United States and sentenced for a definite term, whose record of conduct shows he had observed the rules of such institution and who has served
one-third of the total of the term, may be released on parole under certain conditions.

In addition to the three Indiana
bankers who are now eligible to parole, there are a number of men from this state who are in the federal prison
as the result of violations of the federal banking laws who have not yet served sufficient time to render them eligible. These are as follows:
Oscar Cochrane, sentenced Dec. 1,
1909, to five years; Max P. Emmerich,
F. H. Nisolia, Edward M. Detzer, Jas.
H. Phillips and Harry C. Prinzler, sentenced Nov. 30, 1909, to five years; W.
H. Marker, sentenced March 29, 1910,
to ten years, and Noah Marker, sentenced March 29, 1910, to seven years.

Colonel Roosevelt Will Speak in Indiana Oct. 13.

New York, July 20.—Senator Albert
J. Beveridge of Indiana called to see Roosevelt at the latter's offices in regard to the speech the colonel is going to make in the senator's behalf on the western trip. T. R. promised Beveridge that he would speak for him in Indiana Oct. 13, the speech to be made
in Indianapolis.

Senator Beveridge retained his customary reticence. He told the reporters at Oyster Bay that he had not granted a public interview in eleven years. That was several weeks ago,
but he stuck to the rule here and would not say a word concerning his chances for election or anything else.

Hoosier Doctor Honored.

Fort Wayne, Ind., July 20.—Dr. H. O.
Bruggeman of this city, who is taking a post graduate course in medicine and surgery in Germany, has just been elected president of the Anglo-American Medical Society at Berlin. Dr.
Bruggeman was secretary of the Fort Wayne city board of health up to last January.

quarry owner, and also shot and
wounded his brother Jasper, Ben Bishop and S. T. Hardwicke, other quarry owners, and then escaped to the woods.

Indiana Republican Leaders Perfectly
Frank With the People.

[Special Correspondence.]

Indianapolis, July 20.—Col. W. T.
Durbin is one of the leading Indiana
Republicans who believe in frankness.
It is in the frankness of Republican leadership in Indiana that the party's strength chiefly lies. Republicans are telling the people the truth. There is nothing to fear from facts. This is Colonel Durbin's theory. It is a good
one. Colonel Durbin's recent interview, which has been mentioned in this correspondence, dealt freely and fearlessly with the tariff question. It has been the contention of Indiana Republicans for several years, and it has come to be the national belief, that tariff schedules are not to be regarded as sacred things, but that changed conditions call for alterations in tariff demands. This position was made clear in the Republican state platform
of Republicans in 1908. It is emphasized in the platform of 1910. Colonel Durbin says in his notable statement,
that when an industry has been stimulated by the protective policy up to a reasonable point, it is time to ease off.
He mentions the tin plate industry.
He points out that tin plate could not have been made in this country if it had not been for the protective tariff.
But he adds that the tin plate business has grown to a greatness which makes it advisable to ease off with the protection.

Now this is plain common sense. It is fair and sane. It is a stand which can be taken by any Republican and by any citizen. It is the sensible middle ground where argument is unnecessary, and where all Republicans can unite and work together for the common cause. It is the middle ground where all the forces of equity and the square deal can join to fight the opposition which is forming under the Tag-garts and Harmons and Baileys of the Democratic party. Coupled with Colonel Durbin's frank tariff remarks, is his declaration in favor of a tariff commission. It needed just this interview with Colonel Durbin to put the cap-sheaf on the Republican harmony harvest. It needed just this timely offering from Colonel Durbin to emphasize the demoralization of the Democratic opposition. Incidentally, just as the Republicans march into view
with harmony flags flying and unity
music playing, the Democrats get all tangled up with the Bryan issue and get to sparring among themselves.

Senator Beveridge called on Colonel Roosevelt in the latter's editorial sanctum at New York city yesterday. Following the Indiana man's call, Colonel Roosevelt announced that he would speak in Indianapolis Oct. 13 for the Indiana Republican ticket.

The Roosevelt rally is to be a night
affair, and the speaking is to follow
a night parade and fireworks. The Wide Awakes will be abroad again
that night, bearing the battle banners
of Lincoln, Morton, Harrison, McKinley and Roosevelt. It is expected that the event will be notable in more ways than one. The speech of Roosevelt is expected to do a lot of good. It will be the first political speech to be made by Colonel Roosevelt in the campaign.
This will make it doubly interesting.
For this fact makes it possible that Colonel Roosevelt will outline his future policy to a greater or less extent
in Indianapolis.

Having reconnoitered from all sides
with extreme care, and finding that John Worth Kern actually was absent, Senator Shively ventured in out of the scrub yesterday and sat in council
with Indiana Democrats. Several days were consumed in finding the missing
statesman, and a day or two were occupied in coaxing him back to the reservation. When he finally came,
Senator Shively talked a little tariff,
and announced that the fight this year
in Indiana would be a campaign
against the tariff policy of the Republican party. Senator Shively denounced the tariff commission as an imponent body, judging and convicting the commission in advance. He did not have anything to say on postal savings
banks, and his vote against the postal savings bank bill.

Democrats met Thursday and made a great show of organization plans. It was reported at the meeting that some progress was being made in the work
of organizing Harmon and Kern clubs
among the foreign voters in Lake and other industrial counties. An Italian club was reported to be forming at Gary. The Democrats are looking wise and saying little about naturaliz-ing foreign voters for the coming campaign. They keep up a picket line fire on the subject of Republican activity
in looking after the foreign vote, evidently intending the shooting to cover their own operations. As a matter of fact, the working men this year will vote the Republican ticket in larger numbers than ever before. They will do this because they believe in the Republican party, and because Democrats have proved insincere and tricky.
So it is likely that the present and recent hustling done by Democrats
among the laboring people will come to naught election day.

Another one of those "invitations"
is reported from Democratic headquarters. It is needless to say that the invitation to W. J. Bryan has not yet been mailed, wired or sent by courier.
Now the Democratic managers announce that they are considering sending a fiscal year of the Democrats
financial show-banquet.

Lotteries.

Lotteries are almost as old as history itself. It is certain that they were known to the Greeks and Romans, and the custom descended, through Italy, to modern times. In the Italian republics of the sixteenth century the lottery principle was applied to encourage the sale of merchandise, the lotto of Florence and that of Venice being well known. The first lotteries in France were licensed in 1656 by Francis I. In England the earliest lotteries sanctioned by the government were for such purposes as the repair of harbors and docks, about 1569. By the Virginia company of 1612 the lottery was brought to America.—New York American.

Hatmaking.

The history of hatmaking in the United States dates back to very early colonial days. In 1662 the assembly of Virginia enacted a law offering ten pounds of tobacco for every good wool or fur hat made in the colony. Delaware in 1753 offered a prize of 40 shillings for the neatest and best hat manufactured in the lower counties. Soon after the close of the Revolution the manufacture of hats had become of great importance in Pennsylvania, and from that time the industry has continued to flourish.

BOXES FOR BRIDE'S CAKE.

The Heart Shape Design a Popular Selection.

The statement that it is not what is done, but how it is done, that counts, verges on the trite, but it is particularly applicable in the little things that contribute toward a pleasant time for wedding guests.

A wedding cake is no longer kept for weeks and weeks. It is cut into little pieces and sent or presented to the guests and friends of the happy pair.

Just how to give this in an attractive form is sometimes a question that clamors for its answer in the rush of the last few days.

Boxes can now be purchased at stationery departments of any large store, and the accessories are within the reach of the majority of brides.

There is a charming little circular box that looks like a miniature wedding cake. When tied with white ribbon or with silken cords that reflect the color scheme of the decorations it is well worth having. The ends of the bow are gathered into the tops of tiny silver bells.

Perhaps the heart shaped box of white is more appropriate. This should hold a heart shaped piece of cake, and the top of the box should be tied down with broad ribbon, fastened under a rosette.

Square forms are always good. The addition of a card with the best wishes of the bride and bridegroom is a little personal touch that is well worth while. Through the knot of ribbon a spray of asparagus fern can be slipped. It lasts for weeks and gives the freshness that is desirable, especially for boxes that are to be sent away through the mail.

To the friends who are present there can easily be given a spray of leaves with a blossom from the decoration of the table or rooms. Tied with a gold or silver cord, a long, narrow box will hold a fresh sprig of flowers. People like to carry with them some part of the festivities. The mania for souvenirs still prevails.

Of course the custom of having the cake cut by the bride herself can easily be observed, for during the reception following the small pieces can be boxed and tied by a special committee of friends and distributed to the guests before their departure.

As to the dreams that may come when the fair recipients sleep with the bride's cake beneath their pillows, who can tell whether they can vie with the pleasure of receiving it in so charming a form?

Mustard Plaster Cure.

"Mustard as a promoter of morals was a new role," said the woman. "Yesterday I heard my Bohemian neighbor say to her eleven-year-old daughter:

"If you do that again I'll put a mustard plaster on you."

"The child didn't do it again. When I asked why the mother told me that in her country disobedient children are punished by applying a mustard plaster. It is more efficacious than whipping, scolding or moral suasion. The plaster isn't left on long enough to blister badly, but even without a blister a mustard plaster is a corrective measure that all little Bohemians try to avoid, even at the expense of good behavior."—New York Press.

The Man Who Remembered

American Journalist

"The Hair of the Ages," Etc.

THE SHADOW OF VESUVIUS

(Copyright, 1909, by W. G. Chapman. Copyright in Great Britain.)

He, a young New Englander, rich, decent, gifted with an uncommon mentality, possesses an uncanny power of vividly recalling the events of his life, by virtue of his weird gift, he is able to recall definite dates and exact details. At the time when these strange adventures began, Cortice happened to be in London, practically penniless, although potentially he commands great wealth. He is reaching out for someone who has faith in his weird gift, he is a young peer of great wealth, who is a fanatical lover of the past. In the person of a young man, the story of the adventures of Barton Cortice, dependent on him, believes implicitly in her brother, having acted as his amanuensis in writing down certain of his recollections. And Scarsdale eventually "make a man of it," as do also Barton Cortice, the Lady Blanche, sister of Lord Vyne. This original quartet are reinforced by John Dare, an American newspaper man, who acts as narrator, and John Forbes, a British mining engineer. After some surprising adventures, connected with a forgotten gold mine in the Andes of Peru, some hidden jewels in France, the lost treasure of King John, the young adventurer is induced to reveal the mystery of an old Scots family; then the story of a forgotten pearl-bought by the Pacific, a remarkable nature while re-visiting an Aztec temple, the recovery of Nero's barge on the Tiber, the capture of the Arabs in the desert, and that identification of Pharaoh's tomb, and the Quest of the Holy Grail. Next comes the adventure of the Italian adventure, in which Cortice, and completes the story of his adventures as a Roman legionary.

HE READER who has followed thus far these vivid reminiscences of the Man Who Remembered, will have gathered that while in the main they are chronological—i. e., that the accounts of his modern adventures occur in regular order, they do not necessarily preserve the progression of Barton Cortice's former reincarnations. As the chief narrator and chronicler of his wonderful remembrances, I take it that either his recollections came to him by successive infusions, or, if I may use the term, or that he could not always control their entrance. As to this matter Cortice was perhaps necessarily. Perhaps, also, he exercised a selection, taking up those adventures which appealed strongest to him at a given time.

So it was with the experience which I am about to chronicle. It will be recalled by the reader that when he and I first went to Italy it was with the express intention that he should pilot me over the routes which he, as a Roman legionary, had formerly followed. The direct result of that trip, innocent of all adventurous intent at the outset, was the recovery of Nero's barge from the bottom of Lake Bolsena. But our tour was interrupted by Barton's recall to England through the illness of his sister. From thence a sudden whim seems to have seized him, as he departed alone for the wilds of western America to prosecute a search, which he had long promised himself, for the secret of an ancient Aztec temple.

In fact, owing as I suppose to his peculiar heredity, Cortice was not to be judged as to his actions by us ordinary mortals. So, on consulting my memoranda, I find that the completion of our Italian tour was delayed until after our somewhat exciting Egyptian experiences. The following year, however, he insisted on carrying me off to Rome once more. Warned by many previous occurrences I was prepared for whatever might happen; indeed, I rather looked forward to something out of the ordinary. Nor was I disappointed.

We were in Rome when the news came to us of the Mont Pelee eruption in the West Indies. To a mind as delicately organized as that of Barton Cortice it may be possible that the seismic conditions then prevalent throughout the earthquake belt were peculiarly provocative of excitement. I need not enter into details—merely recording the fact that for several days he was excitable, and, as we Americans say, "on edge."

Consequently I was not surprised one morning to hear him say: "Do you mind if we make a quick move?" "I'm at your services, my dear fellow," I answered. "One place in Italy is as good as the next to me. My paper will print my letters from one spot as well as another."

"That's fine," he exclaimed. "I'll accompany you to Naples. You've seen me from a distance, but about that I'm a criminal, all right, to be sure."

"I'm at your services, my dear fellow," I answered. "One place in Italy is as good as the next to me. My paper will print my letters from one spot as well as another."

"That's fine," he exclaimed. "I'll accompany you to Naples. You've seen me from a distance, but about that I'm a criminal, all right, to be sure."

"I'm at your services, my dear fellow," I answered. "One place in Italy is as good as the next to me. My paper will print my letters from one spot as well as another."

A little further on we came to a large square building.

"What's this place?" I asked. "Our old barracks," Cortice answered. "A good many of the poor fellows never got away that night." "I fluttered the leaves of my guide-book, and sure enough came to the entry: 'Here 64 skeletons were found, presumably those of soldiers on guard.'"

"Quite right," I remarked. "Ah," he inquired. Then, seeing the book in my hand, ejaculated scornfully: "Of course I'm right. Wasn't I here?"

We tramped the silent streets, once densely populated with soldiers and senators, queens and courtesans, for two or three hours. On certain of the houses signs had been placed, such as: House of Sallust, House of the Tragic Poet, House of the Faun, and so on, named thus by the excavators according to the objects found therein. These names gave Cortice unmitigated disgust.

"They're all wrong!" he spluttered, "but they wouldn't believe me if I told them the truth, so what's the use?"

We tramped through the wheel-rutted streets, we visited the ancient Coliseum, the so-called Temple of Isis, and the Forum. In all our peregrinations Cortice seemed perfectly sure of his route, and named each site correctly, as I found by covert references to my faithful Baedeker. But still he seemed dissatisfied and somewhat at a loss. Again and again he went over a certain route, stopping frequently, apparently to get his bearings. At length, when sunset was approaching, and the time for departure at hand, he exclaimed, peevishly:

"I wish Retta were here! She always helps. I'll have to leave it until tomorrow—sleep may bring me the exact touch I want."

So we went back to our hotel at Torre del Greco—right in the shadow of Vesuvius and within ten or twelve miles of the buried city.

Whether or not it was the "at-their shrieks for rescue, and seeing that to save any valuables was out of the question, I rushed to their assistance. I recall enveloping each of them from head to foot in some heavy woolen garments, leaving just a tiny aperture for nose and eyes. Then I led them to the gate, and set their faces toward the harbor, bidding them keep to the middle of the street and follow the other fugitives.

"Then I returned to see if perchance others had been left, pushing my way, short sword in hand, into the most private apartments. But not a soul remained. I was left alone. Now, it was the rule of the Roman service that a sentinel once placed on guard, might not depart until relieved. So, although death stared me in the face, I chose to remain at my post."

"The atrium was by now half filled with ashes and lava, and still the hot rain descended, being whirled in drifts by the tornado of wind. So I betook myself for shelter to the smallest cubiculum I could find—little bigger than my sentry-box, and there awaited what the gods might send, resolved to die at the post of duty. The last I could remember is setting my brazen helmet on my head, tightening my harness, and grasping my good sword firmly. Then—oblivion!"

By any listener to this vivid account of the last hours of this brave Roman soldier, perishing at the post of duty, it was impossible to doubt that Barton Cortice had been that very man.

"And what now?" I queried.

"You'll soon see," he remarked, with a quiet smile. Then:

"All day yesterday I was trying to locate Vanadus' house among those uncovered, but I could not even find the thoroughfare, which in those days bore the fanciful name of Street of the Doves. But to-day all is different. I am going to take you there—and we shall see what we shall see."

Well, we went perhaps a hundred yard outside the excavated area, and groped about a certain spot. I feet from pavement to cornice. Consequently, the labor was not as great as might at first sight appear.

Thus far Cortice had contented himself with general directions, but now that we were really within the house where he met his tragic death, by tacit consent of Signor Mattel he assumed charge, massing the force of laborers at one corner or the atrium.

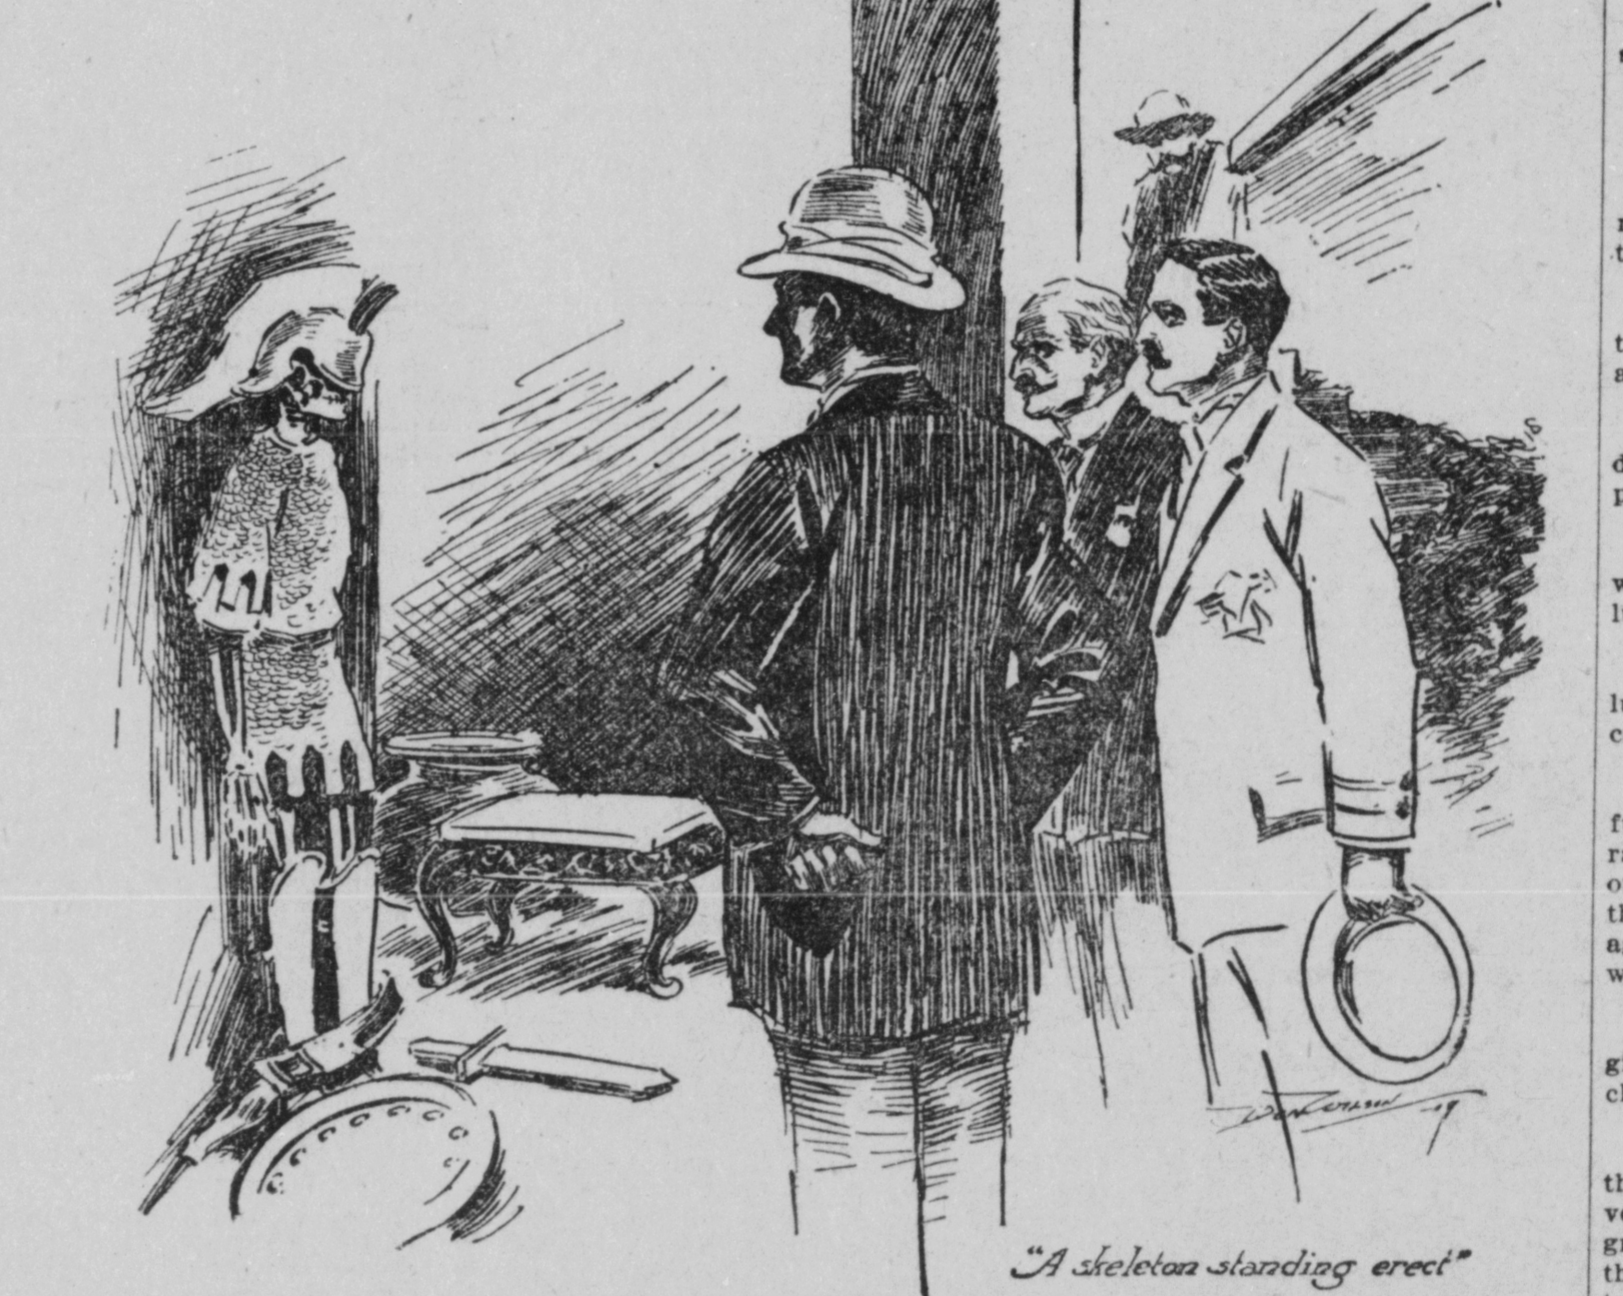

Now, the Pompeians did not use doors within their dwellings; the entrances to the cubula or sleeping-places were masked by curtains simply. This particular corner, it seemed, had been protected somewhat from the rain of ashes by a slight projection from the roof or cornice above. Consequently the stuff to be shoveled away was much lighter and not so tightly packed as elsewhere.

Cortice had jumped on to the pile of ashes the instant the opening into the cubiculum appeared, and even seized a shovel himself. When three feet had been dug away he stopped and peered within; then resumed digging harder than ever, his example nerveing the gang to redoubled efforts, for his excitement was contagious. They just pitched the stuff for the present into the center of the atrium.

In half an hour at most the entire narrow doorway was clear, and there was besides a small space in front where four or five of us could crowd together. And this is what we saw:

A narrow room perhaps eight feet deep by five or six wide, bare of furnishings save a water-jar, a curved metal stool or bancal, and a shelf on which still stood some small statuettes. The walls were decorated with figures of flying birds, fishes, flowers, and some rather unconventional female figures, all exquisitely drawn and colored, the latter as vivid as though the artist had but lately left.

But our eyes took in these minor details at one unconcerned sweep—Pompeii abounded in such. What caught our gaze and held us spell-bound was a skeleton standing erect

"A skeleton standing erect"

mosphere" of his old haunts—the lurid flashes from the volcano cast gleams of fitful light on the walls of my room all night—that helped Barton's sub-conscious train of thought, the morning found him alert, clear-eyed, and purposeful.

"When I was here before," he remarked in that matter-of-fact tone which took your breath away if you didn't know the man and his past, "I was on duty in Pompeii, the night of the great eruption. My detail was to guard the house of Vanadus, the pro-consul—a villa replete with priceless statues, paintings, and what we nowadays call objets d'art."

"Just why a soldier of the Pretorian Guard was needed I can't tell you; perhaps the company was somewhat mixed and would bear watching. Then, too, the manners of the time were licentious in the extreme, and when the guests were filled with rich food and wine most anything was likely to happen. However, there I was stationed in the atrium, the large inner court from which all the living and sleeping rooms radiated."

"Well, the revelry was at its height when the trouble began—lightnings, thunderings, shocks of earthquake, and tornadoes of wind, on which was borne showers of ashes and molten lava which deluged everything. The atrium, as usual, was open to the sky, a fountain playing in the center. I can hear this very minute the sputter of the red-hot lava and ashes as they fell into that fountain, hissing and causing clouds of steam."

"In an instant panic reigned from one end of the city to the other. The mephitic vapors put out all the lights and a hellish darkness surrounded everything, which was, however, perpetually laced by the belching flames from old Vesuvius. The guests poured up for shelter into the street, and I was the last to look him an 'adieu'."

was amazed to see at least a hundred Italian laborers armed with pick, shovel and basket, besides a gold-laced official whom Cortice introduced me to as Signor Matteo Mattel, one of the government experts entrusted with the duty of overseeing the uncovering of long-buried Pompeii. Doubtless, I reflected, Count Mario's credentials had not been without effect, although I did not believe that Cortice had confided in Mattel to the extent of revealing his peculiar past.

Cortice took his bearings from the intersection of two streets—you will understand that the spot where we stood was considerably higher, over the low roofs of the old city, in fact, and that the surface soil was rough and barren, looking like nothing so much as a bed of light-gray ashes not very closely compacted together.

"Here, I judge, will be about the spot," said Cortice at length, indicating a certain place.

In a jiffy those Italians fell to work with the aforesaid pick and shovel and basket. And how they did make the dirt fly! First they opened up a wide trench, and from that dug lateral trenches, the light ash and scoriae being shoveled into an endless lines of bushel baskets and carried away to the dumping-place outside the city's ancient oval wall.

By noon they had uncovered an area of perhaps half an acre. First some roofs appeared about two feet from the surface; then upright walls; after that the laborers, who were experts in their way, simply followed the wall. That they were digging out the ancient Street of the Doves became apparent when on the corner of the wall appeared a beautiful painting of two doves billing, the colors as fresh as when laid on 2,000 years before.

Returned from lunch we found the excavation digging in a new direction.

at the far end, the brass helmet dropped low over the sightless eyes, and at its feet a cuirass, round shield, belt and sword. In life it had undoubtedly been a stalwart Roman soldier at least six feet tall, for the posture was that of a warrior at attention. And there it stood—nameless, forgotten, yet emblematic of two things—the power of Rome and of that stern discipline which caused the flesh-and-blood man to remain unrelieved at his post until death had overtaken him.

We stood there with bared heads, doing silent homage to the unknown hero. I stole a glance at Cortice, and noticed a curious little smile playing around the corners of his mouth. In silence he stepped toward the skeleton and picked up the wicked-looking short Roman sword. Facing about he addressed Mattel, saying:

"Is it permitted that I retain this as a—er—souvenir of the occasion?"

Of course it was against all the rules—everything of value found in the museum in Naples. But the intend-ant doubtless thought it would be ungracious to refuse, in view of what Cortice had accomplished, so he gave tacit, if not verbal, assent, with a bow and a wave of the hand, saying: "My congratulations, Signor Cortice," he pronounced the name in the Italian fashion, Cortecche—"your intuitions were singularly correct. I shall have the honor of writing my colleague that at Pompeii, also, you have been of great and disinterested service."

Cortice muttered some brief acknowledgment and turned away, the sword buttoned under his coat. With the achievement of his point his interest seemed to cease. As we gained the cleared Street of the Tombs, he drew a long breath and remarked, whimsically, with a grin: "Well, John Dare, I really guess you're right. I've been wondering where the shortest days in the year are."

PAVEMENT PHILOSOPHY

No man feels that he has a right to be left.

Many a girl's beauty is spoiled by an ugly frame of mind.

Of two evils it isn't always necessary to choose either.

The man with a hot temper doesn't always make a warm friend.

The fellow who is full of hot air doesn't always manage to get up steam.

One good swift kick will often accomplish more than a lot of kindness.

Trouble is the most obliging thing in the world. It will never dodge the people who are looking for it.

Some people can't even do their duty without patting themselves on the back.

Perhaps our clouds have a silver lining, but it generally takes other people to see it.

Lots of us never put off till tomorrow what we can have done for us today.

It's the things we don't get that we should sometimes be most thankful for.

Circumstances over which we have no control frequently take the form of wives.

Many a fellow's lofty ideals extend no further than highballs.

Some people are so tireless that they become positively tiresome.

The best man at a wedding is the fellow who isn't getting married.

To greet misfortune with a smile is decidedly a one-sided flirtation.

Lots of marriages merely demonstrate that misery loves company.

WEDDING DAY OMENS

The bride who dreams of fairies the night before her marriage will be twice blessed.

If the bridegroom carries a miniature horseshoe in his pocket he will always have luck.

Don't wear an opal. Some people declare that opals are lucky. History proves the contrary.

The bride who finds a spider in her wedding dress may consider herself lucky.

No bride, if she would have good luck, should bake her own wedding cake. To do so invites ill fortune.

Should a bride, perchance, see a funeral while being driven to the railway station prior to departing upon her wedding tour, she should order the driver to turn back and start over again, or else she will surely meet with bad luck.

No bride or bridegroom should be given a telegram while on the way to church. It is a sign of evil.

To try on the wedding ring before the day of the marriage is considered very unlucky. And for the bridegroom to drop it while placing it on the bride's finger is also held to betoken misfortune.

To lose the ring—or even to remove it from the finger—is another unlucky sign.

QUIET THOUGHTS

A still tongue carries further.

The finger of scorn should be curved.

Some bad neighbors are so from example.

Many suburbs are paved with good intentions.

Man is known by the company he works.

Also dirt is a good friend, but a bad master.

Some folks keep up their appearances, but let their fences go.

Too much booze also makes the world go round.

It is better to get down to brass tacks than to sit on one.

Three rhyming words that are very closely related: "Boys," "toys" and "noise."

SCIENCE BRIEFS

Our ladies who stp peppermint essence will be horrified at the chemist's report, which shows that lager beer contains only 4 per cent of alcohol and peppermint essence 23 per cent.

The best way to get an increase of salary is to work so hard the boss can't get along without you—then quit.

The fashion for red barns is dying out in the country districts.

NEWS FROM ETHEL

"Ethel must be going crazy!" exclaimed Mrs. Roxwell, who stood by the window of the breakfast room staring at a night telegram from her daughter.

"Why do you make such a strange remark, Elizabeth?" asked Ethel's Aunt Mary. "Ethel hasn't run away from school on its closing week, has she?"

"Of course not. She says she will be home today on the four o'clock train."

"Nothing crazy about that," remarked Ethel's Aunt Mary, slipping into her place at the table and wishing that her brother-in-law would make his appearance so that breakfast might be served.

"She has changed her mind," said Mrs. Roxwell. "We expected her tomorrow, you know, and she has concluded to come today instead."

"The mind," observed Ethel's Aunt Mary dietetically, "is not like a garment. We can change it without being out of it for a single moment. If a woman should be considered crazy merely because she changed her mind a good many of us would be handed over to the alienists. I must say, Elizabeth, you are very foolish thus to agitate yourself over a trifle. Ethel was coming home on Wednesday, she decides to come on Tuesday instead, and you are out of temper because you will see her 24 hours sooner than you expected. I am surprised at you, her own mother!"

"I am not!" snapped Mrs. Roxwell, irritably.

"You are not her mother?" inquired Ethel's Aunt Mary, with lifted eyebrows.

"Mary, there are times when you would vex a saint!" cried Mrs. Roxwell.

"Of course," she explained, more calmly, "I am glad that my daughter will be with me sooner than I had expected her to come, but—well, read her telegram for yourself."

Ethel's Aunt Mary adjusted her eyeglasses and read:

"I wish to say will be at home on Tuesday at four. On the train. The usual route. I changed my mind and will be at home on Tuesday instead of Wednesday. I will be there if the train is on time, otherwise will take the consequences. 45. The teachers are well. ETHEL."

Mrs. Roxwell waited with a somber brow while her sister read the telegram.

"It seems rather—e—lengthy," commented Ethel's Aunt Mary.

"Lengthy! I should say so," agreed Mrs. Roxwell, with considerable indignation. "She could have told all that was necessary in the usual ten words. And the loose construction of it! Why, that girl finishes school in another year!"

"She has a good deal to learn about the handling of the English language in that time," criticized Ethel's Aunt Mary. "Schools are not so particular as they were in our day, Elizabeth. I can't make out what she means by those figures—45."

"She probably thought the train gets in at 4:45 instead of four, and put the figures at the end instead of where they belong. See how she begins, 'I wish to say.' Naturally she wished to say something or she need not have telegraphed."

"It is doubtless the style now to take nothing for granted," suggested Ethel's Aunt Mary.

"It evidently is," assented Mrs. Roxwell. "She says she is coming on the train. There is no other way that she could come, unless she should walk."

"She may have supposed that you would expect her to come on an aeroplane," suggested Ethel's Aunt Mary, with some sarcasm. "She remarks that if the train is not on time she will have to take the consequences. What consequences? Did you ever scold her because her train was late?"

"Certainly not. She simply means that she will suffer the usual annoyance caused by the delay."

"I see. Ethel's idea of a telegram seems to be that one should leave nothing to the imagination. She says the teachers are well. Have they been ill?"

"Not that I am aware of. That sentence seems to have been thrown in as a piece of general information. I could have waited until she arrives this afternoon to be apprised of the state of the faculty's health. But here is Charles. Let us see what he thinks of his daughter's telegraphic effort."

Roxwell laughed when he read Ethel's communication.

"The little puss was determined to get the worth of her money," he explained. "It is one of those telegraphic letters in which 50 words can be sent at night at the rate of ten words. When you know you are at liberty to write so many words you've no idea how difficult it is to think them up. Her figures mean that she has achieved 45 words up to that point. Then she adds that sentence about the teachers to make the even fifty."

"It is difficult to keep abreast of the times," sighed Ethel's Aunt Mary. "I had not heard about this new way of telegraphing."

"I am glad to have Ethel's higgledy-piggledy sentences explained," said Mrs. Roxwell, with a sigh of relief.

A STRAY DAY.

Into the heart of winter crept a day
Filled with the amber glory of a noon
That broods above the world when radiant
May
Clasp hands with queenly June.
Like some fair truant, who release had found
From sunny cloisters under southern
skies,
She came to us, sedately capped and
gowned,
But laughter in her eyes!

Warmed by her smile the little snowbirds swept
Across the icy fields on happy wing;
Beneath the earth's chill crust where'er she stepped

The flowers dreamed of spring!
Lulled by the gentle presence of that day
The bitter winter winds grew soft and sweet;

The arrows of the frost sped low, and lay
Harmless beneath her feet.

She freed imprisoned springs, and sent the rills

With dance and song to levels far below;
Swept from the bold, brown faces of the hills

Their velvet masks of snow.
Indulgent Mother Nature looked and
stepped

At all the pretty pranks and wilful play
Of this unbidden, daring, darling child
She soon must send away!

For when the sunset fires began to glow,
And all the little snowbirds' song had ceased;

When shadows lengthened o'er the fields
of snow

Toward the darkening east,
The pretty vagrant went as she had come,
Across the land to where warm sunbeams
lay—

The fleeting phantom—the dear ghost of

Forgotten summer's day!

The Tables Turned

By LENA BLINN LEWIS

THERE are five of the Perkins', including Sally, and "a hard lot of boys to manage," old Mr. Howard remarked the morning I saw a sweet-looking girl come out of the cottage across the way.

"Yes, Sally has her hands full," he continued. "I wonder how she has managed with the twins both down with the mumps and Rob in high school, but she is a trump and seems to keep the ball rolling and the trousers and stockings patched and darned in good shape; and she is always doing something to give the boys a good time."

"Sally is two years younger than Rob, but she gave up her chance of an education and has scrimped and saved to help him through school and has been so cheerful through it all. Yes, she has a bit of fun about her, too, and I think that has something to do with her success in keeping the family together. It's a regular clubhouse for Rob's friends, and the boys all stand by Sally Perkins."

"I shall never forget last April Fool's day. It does me good every time I think of it." Mr. Howard laughed heartily, and I appreciated his story of how Sally turned the tables.

"It seems that Rob Perkins was full of good-natured mischief and one of those boys that are always getting others into scrapes. He was a great fellow for company and sometimes taxed Sally's patience and the pantry to the extreme."

He would say: "O, Sally, I have asked George and Charlie to come over to-night. Do not go to any trouble, but get a light supper."

And Sally would have to plan and contrive to have things really nice, for she had as much pride as Rob and wanted him to make as good a showing in his home as the other boys could do; and the result was that both she and Rob were general favorites among the young people.

It was Rob's last year in high school, and as Sally busied herself about her work she was thinking of what the future held in store for them all. After Rob left home to teach, then came Jim, but he had determined to go into the electrical business and would not finish school. Sally had ambitions for the twins, and was seriously thinking and planning for their welfare, when she was interrupted.

"I think it's a downright shame, if it is Rob's crowd."

The two little boys had come into the kitchen and Sally looked up from the apple she was paring, and saw that they were really very serious.

"What is it that is such a shame?" she asked, going on with her pries.

"Why, Rob and the other boys are going to play a mean joke on some of the girls to-morrow night. You know there is to be a concert at the assembly rooms, and the boys have written invitations inviting them girls to attend, and they had us kids deliver them. We overheard the plan, but did not dare to refuse to take them, you know."

"Well, that is all very nice so far," and Sally half wished she had been in the invited party. It was a concert that she would like very much to attend.

"Yes, but they are not going to call for the girls at all, but send another lot of notes with only 'April Fool' written on a blank sheet. The boys say they are only getting even for snubs, but I don't believe any of them have been snubbed unless they needed it. They are a conceited lot, anyway."

Sally reproved her small brother for making such an assertion, but she half smiled as she knew that she was nearly of the same opinion.

"The fellows are all going to go to the concert and have a jolly time, 'tagging it,' and for my part I can't see the funny part of it," added one twin.

"Sally was a faithful friend."

she said, "I'll turn the tables on these boys, and you will have to help me."

Later in the evening, Rob came in whistling.

"Hello, Sally, give me a kiss. You're the best girl in a thousand lands, and—"

"What's wanted, Rob? You must be going to ask a favor," she said, smilingly.

"Pshaw, I do mean it, Sally. But say, could I have the fellows over to supper to-morrow night? We are all going to the symphony, you know. You needn't make a spread, but get us just a light supper."

"Why, yes, Rob, that will be jolly and I think a light supper will be nicest, anyway, for you will probably want to take the girls out for a cup of coffee or a rarebit after the concert."

Rob smiled a very happy smile and said: "You are all right, little girl, and I know some one else who thinks so, too."

Sally's cheeks grew very pink, and Rob settled down to his Latin.

Early the next morning, the twins went on another round of calls, and carried dainty notes to the girls, in which Sally had fully explained the situation. And by afternoon the girls, including Sally, had tickets for the concert and had arranged to meet at the assembly rooms at an early hour. Sally's plan was working. She had sent the twins to spend the evening with a neighbor; Jim had gone into the country for the night, and the way was clear for her to carry out her idea. The twins were permitted to assist in preparing the supper for the boys, and their part was to go after the candlesticks, which the girls had offered for the occasion.

Sally's eyes sparkled as she spread the snowy table cloth and placed the silver at each plate, with a napkin and even a finger bowl on the side. In front of each plate stood a lighted candle, and in the center of the table was a large candelabra with six candles. Standing by this was a large card with the following printed message:

"Light Suppers
For foolish duffers
On All Fools' Eve."

Sally made good her escape and met the boys on the way to the house. Rob looked amazed when he saw her, but she smiled reassuringly, and said: "I had an invitation out to tea, boys, and I left a light supper on the table; you can just help yourselves. I thought you might enjoy having a little party all by yourselves, you know."

The boys agreed that that would be the finest thing out, and Sally hurried on to meet the girls.

Rob was hilarious and opened the dining-room door with a grand flourish, saying: "Hurrah, boys, I am as hungry as a bear, and I—"

Here he stopped short and a look of wonder and dismay came over his face. The lighted candles had surprised him, and in a moment he saw there was not a thing to eat on the table. One of the boys had espied the card and read it aloud to the others. Everyone laughed his hardest, but Rob, the joke was on him, and he explained to the boys his usual request for a 'light supper'; he felt mean that they all should have to suffer at his expense. He soon regained his good nature, however, and said: "Well, we will make a raid on the pantry."

But to his chagrin, the door was securely locked, as was the basement, and they were forced to go without their supper.

George Madden said later: "Do you know, boys, I feel that perhaps we have gone too far, and I propose that we go after the girls, after all, and own up to the joke and turn it all into a good time at the concert. We can probably get seats about the house, and if not, we can go over to Smith's and have a little supper together."

What George said usually carried weight; and as it was getting late they hurried away in separate directions, promising to meet at the assembly rooms.

One by one they arrived at the concert, alone and with queer expressions on their faces. For the first time they associated Sally with the joke, and George Madden said to himself: "She is the nicest girl I ever knew, and I mean to know her better."

The girls were all together in good seats and seemingly enjoying the music to the fullest extent. The boys could not find seats, and as they were so late the ones for which they had tickets had been given to others, and they were obliged to stand. They talked matters over and decided to wait for the girls and own themselves beaten in their own game, and propose that they all go out for supper, as they had planned; but the girls had another idea and slipped through a side entrance, and the boys had the privilege of seeing them through the window of Winnie Gerard's home, deep in the mystery of a chafing-dish concoction; and they felt very foolish and small, as was the appropriate way to feel on All Fools' eve.—Detroit Free Press.

Joy of the Christian Ministry

BEFORE proceeding to speak of some of the special joys of the ministry I confess right at the beginning that it presents some problems to day which the fathers hardly knew and for which the church itself is partly to blame, and which is partly a product of the times, says a writer in the Christian Work and Endeavor. The church and not the ministry can remedy it. These problems will frighten some men, and rightly. They are now no doubt keeping young men from the ministry. Reference is here made, of course, to the almost impossible demands the modern town church makes upon one man. It expects him to be a good preacher, a good financier, a good executive and organizer, a good pastor, a worker with children and young people, while he must attract the thoughtful men by his serious thought.

Preaching Must Be of High Quality. Now, except in the very exceptional man, these qualities are rarely united, and even more infrequently are the tastes for the other things present where that for one is strong. Preaching in this day of low-priced books and universal reviews must be of high quality to hold people and instruct them. It requires the almost individual attention of the preacher. Even large pastoral tasks may hinder, although pastoral work is closely akin to preaching, as it deals with human souls. Not so with executive work.

A college of four hundred men has a president as executive head and financier; a teacher for every branch, who does nothing but teach his subject; a chaplain to give all his thought to religious instruction; a physical director for the gymnasium. Then, below the college is the preparatory school, where there is again an entirely new set of officers and teachers, especially adapted to children. It is impossible to think of Professor George P. Fisher greatly interesting a crowd of children, or even boys in the high school; but how great a teacher he was to the eager student of senior year! Now the church gives six hundred men, women and children to one man, and since the church, in a sense, calls for as much variety of function as a college, expects one man to be everything to all kinds and ages of people, the wonder is that so many men succeed in being universal in their functions as they do. But it gets harder every year. There are very few men who can be both acceptable preachers and at the same time excellent administrators and Young Men's Christian association secretaries and physical directors and heads of great parish houses. There is no doubt this extreme diversity of function is frightening many men, for most men have tastes and prefer to follow them. They feel they can do one thing well and prefer to do it. But this condition will pass. The church will have to make a readjustment in this regard. Meantime, let no young man be too much afraid of it, for the joys and opportunities more than compensate for it.

Joys That Are Lasting.

These joys are very great and are all remunerative. For they are not joys which flood the soul with happiness and then pass, but they leave solid contribution of character and power. First of all, the minister lives in the companionship of the greatest souls and minds and thoughts of the ages. Every morning he spends with the great books of the world. His ministry leads him into every field of thought. The lawyer may keep to his law books, the physician to his medical books, the teacher of mathematics to his mathematical books, but for the preacher there is no one subject narrower than human life itself. There is no one class of books for him. His work will call him to read continually all the great poetry of the world. He must know the great fiction for its interpretation of life's problems. He must know history and biography.

The optimist remembers how Doctor Hills recently gave a superb and religiously valuable course of sermons on "The Religious Message of the Great Poets"; how Doctor Jefferson has recently preached a great course of sermons on "The History and Nature of the Christian Church"; how another preacher has preached a course on "Christian Apologetics," showing the divinity of Christianity by what it has done in social redemption; the men, the art, the poetry, the literature it has produced. Think of the joy of these three preachers in preparing these sermons. What a great, varied, rich world they spent their mornings in. And then, above all, the minister spends several hours a week in that greatest book of all, that library of the soul's aspirations and God's thoughts toward men, which, year by year, when read broadly and naturally, becomes a world of joy unspeakable—the Bible. The writer once spent three mornings a week for a year studying the "Teachings of Jesus," gathering them under subjects. He then collected from scholars, essayists, preachers and poets the references to these "Such has

HARMON GAVE MAYOR A PRETTY STRONG TIP

Columbus's Executive Forced to Get Busy.

Columbus, O., July 30.—Rioting, taxing the efforts of the entire Columbus
police force and seventy-five special police, as well as of the 2,000 state
troops brought here, marked the resumption last evening of streetcar traffic. Governor Harmon returned from Charlevoix, Mich., on the heels
of the summoning of the troops, and traffic, halted Wednesday night, was resumed at nightfall.

At noon Governor Harmon issued an ultimatum that Mayor G. S. Marshall
must use his police to protect cars;
that the troops would not do police
duty, but would respond to specific appeals for aid in dispersing the threatening or violent mob. The troops had plenty to do with the coming of dark. The fifty arrests made last night were made by the soldiery.
Troop A, the Cleveland millionaire cavalry, divided into two squads and dispersed many mobs, while the two mounted machine guns of Battery C of Columbus, borne in autos, put terror
into the hearts of as many more threatening crowds.

Despite stationing of soldiers every few blocks in the affected district a half hundred cars were abandoned,
their crews beaten by crowds before police and troops could arrive. A score of injured men are in hospitals, the result of stone throwing and the use of clubs and fists. Shots have been exchanged by rioters and strike breakers. But the troops have not used their riot ammunition. The governor's ultimatum to the mayor was in the form of a veiled threat that removal of the mayor might follow evidence of shirking the quelling of rioting by the executive.

Confirming His Suspicions to His Own Satisfaction, Commander of the Montrose Confided His Secret Only
to His Chief Officer and the Wireless Operator, and Crippen's Fellow Passengers Do Not Know His Identity.

Montreal, July 30.—According to advices received by the Canadian Pacific Steamship company the Montrose, on which Dr. Crippen and his woman companion are supposed to be, is not expected to be reported again till late this afternoon from Fame Point, and she is not expected to reach Father
Point until some time on Sunday morning.

Although messages have been published as having been sent by wireless
by Captain Kendall stating that he believed the suspects are the people
wanted, no messages have been received from the captain at the steamship offices here.

NOT LOG IN COURT

How Captain Kendall Came to Spot
Crippen and Companion.

Montreal, July 30.—Captain Kendall
of the steamship Montrose sent a message via Glace Bay wireless station identifying Dr. Crippen and his companion as the pair wanted by Scotland
Yard for the murder of Belle Elmore,
the doctor's actress wife. The details seem to absolutely clinch the fact that the suspected pair are Crippen and Miss Levee. He discovered the pair
two hours after leaving Antwerp, but did not wire his owners for the simple reason that he had not sufficient evidence. He conversed with both and found his suspicions verified.

They took passage at Brussels as
Rev. John Robinson and Master Robinson, and came aboard at Antwerp with only a small bag as luggage. On deck the girl squeezed Crippen's hand.
It was the captain's first clue.

The captain examined their hats
when at lunch and found Crippen's
to be stamped Jackson on the band.
The woman's hat had no name, but was packed around the brim. Her suit fits badly and is tucked up behind with a large safety pin. Captain Kendall says he did not arrest the pair because he was absolutely certain that they did not suspect that he was at all suspicious of their identity. He knew that they would remain quietly aboard
if merely watched closely and unmolested. He therefore, instead of making any aggressive move, conversed with them freely and did all in his power to draw them out. In fact,
at the present moment the Crippens,
or Robinsons, consider the captain one of their best friends and are willing to accept his advice on almost any subject. The passengers have no idea who their traveling companions are.
The captain and his chief officers and
the wireless operator are the only ones
aboard who know the true state of affairs.

TO PLACE COTTON IN BONDED WAREHOUSES

Plan Proposes to Save Millions to Planters.

Gloucester, Mass., July 30.—At John Hays Hammond's home in this city
there was a conference having for its purpose the revolutionizing of the cotton industry in the United States,
in which Mr. Hammond, Daniel J. Scully, the New York cotton operator, and Scott Dalgleish of Cairo, Egypt, the representative of the Hirsch syndicate
of London, figured. Mr. Hammond is president of the General Cotton Securities, of which concern Scully is general manager.

The plan is one to establish warehouses in all parts of the cotton producing districts of the country as well
as in the manufacturing centers for the storing of the cotton crop, so that instead of selling it from hand to mouth, as has been the practice heretofore, it will be marketed through the entire year when desirable. It is thought that economy will be effected
in the marketing of cotton which will result in a saving of not less than $50,000,000 a year.

It is proposed to establish warehouses under bonded keepers, and a fund of $2,500,000 will be placed in the hands of trustees to guarantee the production of each individual bale of cotton placed in the warehouses as well as its staple and grade. The owner of the cotton who places it in the warehouse, whether he be the local planter
or the local merchant, will receive for
it a negotiable warehouse receipt upon which money can be raised at the bank.

Upset All Traditions.

Oskaloosa, Ill., July 30.—Henry Krintz, having lived to the ripe old age
of seventy-five, has upset all traditions
of the comic papers by wedding his mother-in-law, sixty years old. His bride, before the wedding, was Mrs.
Elizabeth Fuchs, whose daughter divorced Krintz several years ago. Both live here. Krintz is a farmer. Friends of the two are trying to figure out just what relation Krintz is to his wife.
The former Mrs. Krintz now becomes his stepdaughter.

Voted Against It.

Indianapolis, July 30.—The votes of the Illinois miners on the proposed compromise looking to an end of their strike are arriving at headquarters of the United Mine Workers in this city,
and it is thought that the compromise
is defeated by a big majority. The vote will be tabulated by a committee consisting of the international secretary, treasurer and international board members.

CARD ATTACHED TO BALLOON FOUND IN JENNINGS COUNTY

G. M. Walter Finds Advertising Card
of W. A. Carter & Son in Jennings County.

A. P. Carter has received the card
which was attached to the balloon
which he sent up from this city on July 12. The remnants of the balloon were found in a corn field, about eight miles east of the city, by G. M.
Walter. The balloon was furnished
Mr. Carter by Hearsey-Willis Company, of Indianapolis, as an advertisement of their bicycle tires. The card attached to the balloon entitled the holder to a bicycle tire free of charge. The balloon was about five feet in height and four feet wide.
When it was sent up, it started north,
but turned east and could be seen for about fifteen minutes.

On the card Mr. Carter wrote: "Return to W. A. Carter & Son," but failed to give an address. On the opposite side of the card, however, was the address of the general offices of the Court of Honor at Springfield, Ill., and Mr. Walter sent the card to that address. It was returned later to Mr.
Carter. The letter received by Mr.
Carter reads:

"Enclosed please find card that was attached to balloon. I found it in the middle of my corn field when I was plowing on Thursday, July 21, 1910,
one-half mile west of Hayden on C.
C. Simor's fruit farm, on the B. & O.
S-W. railroad, eight miles east of Seymour. The balloon was destroyed by the rain.

"Your truly,

"G. M. WALTER,
"Hayden."

Mr. Carter also received a letter from W. E. Robinson, supreme recorder of the Court of Honor, complimenting him upon his novel way of advertising.

ANNA BELLE.

The pictures of the original Anna Belle continue to be in demand by the little girls of Seymour. Anna Belle appears every Saturday evening in the comic section of the Daily Republican. With her varied costumes,
and her friends who appear with her,
they make an interesting group of playmates for many of the Republican's little friends. A picture of the original Anna Belle will be given by the Republican to every little girl who brings to the office four reasons why
she likes the Anna Belle pictures.
Here are one little girl's reasons for liking Anna Belle:

Lois Scoopmire: 1. I like them because I have so much fun playing with them; 2. She has brothers and sisters; 3. Her dresses are made in the latest styles; 4. My friends all like to play with them.

Others who have brought reasons
for liking Anna Belle are: Luella
Mascher, Opal May Preston, Madge
Reed, Thelma Reed, Hazel Marjorie Humes.

Rods Big Barn.

Ed Eldridge, the agent for one of the well-known lightning rod companies, has returned from Medora,
where he has placed several hundred feet of fine lightning rod upon the large barn belonging to Howard J.
Smith. Mr. Eldridge has given this business much attention and places
the rods so that their position will be scientifically correct.

B. F. Schneek went to Louisville
on business this morning.

ZOO GOSSIP - HOW THE LION GOT HIS MANE

MANY YEARS AGO A WANDEROO MONKEY MET A BALD-HEADED MONKEY IN THE FOREST. THE BALD-HEADED MONKEY WONDERED AT THE WANDEROO'S HEAVY HEAD OF HAIR AND ASKED HOW HE OBTAINED IT

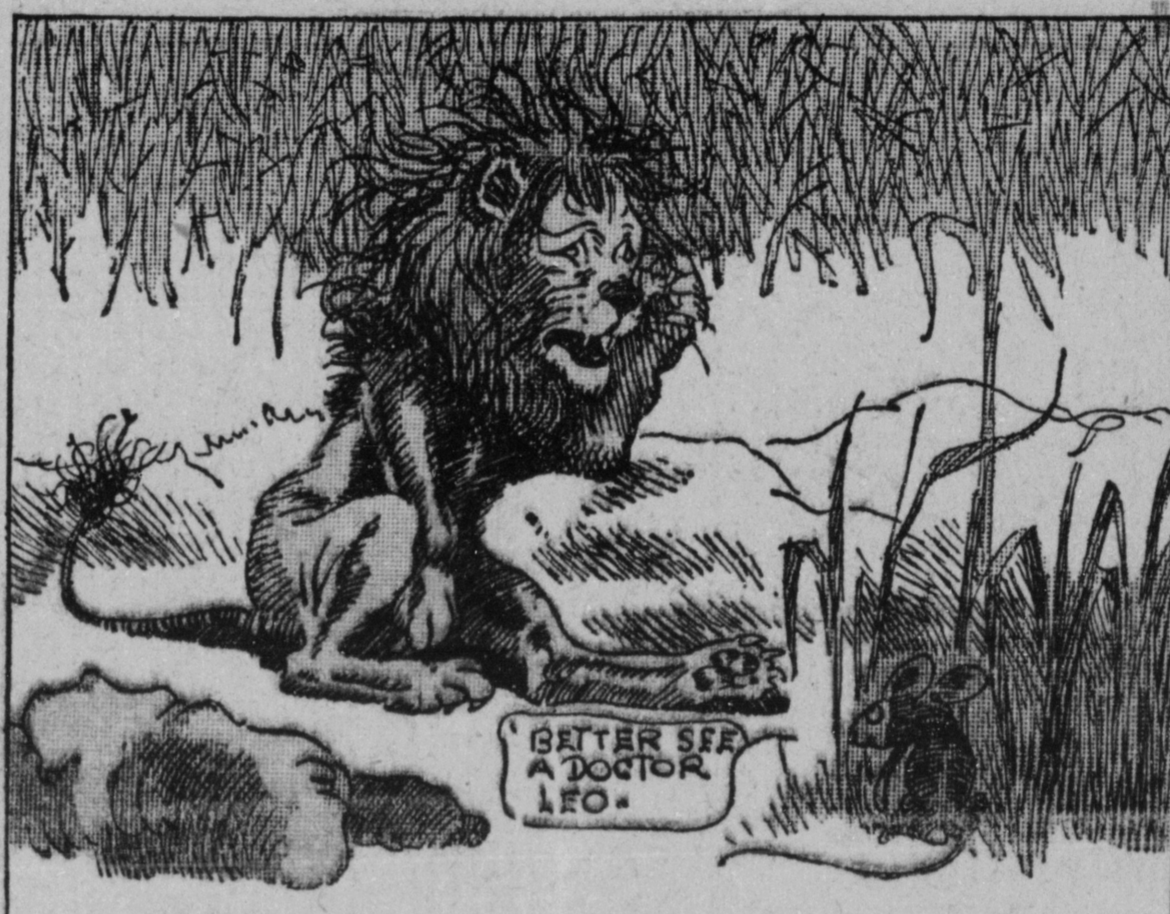

"COUNTLESS YEARS BACK," REPLIED THE WANDEROO. "A HAIRY MASTODON GAVE MY TRIBE A MARVELOUS HAIR PREPARATION, CLAIMING IT HAD GIVEN HIM HIS LONG HAIR." THEN HE GAVE THE BALD-HEADED MONKEY A HALF COCONUT OF THE WONDERFUL HAIR GROWER.

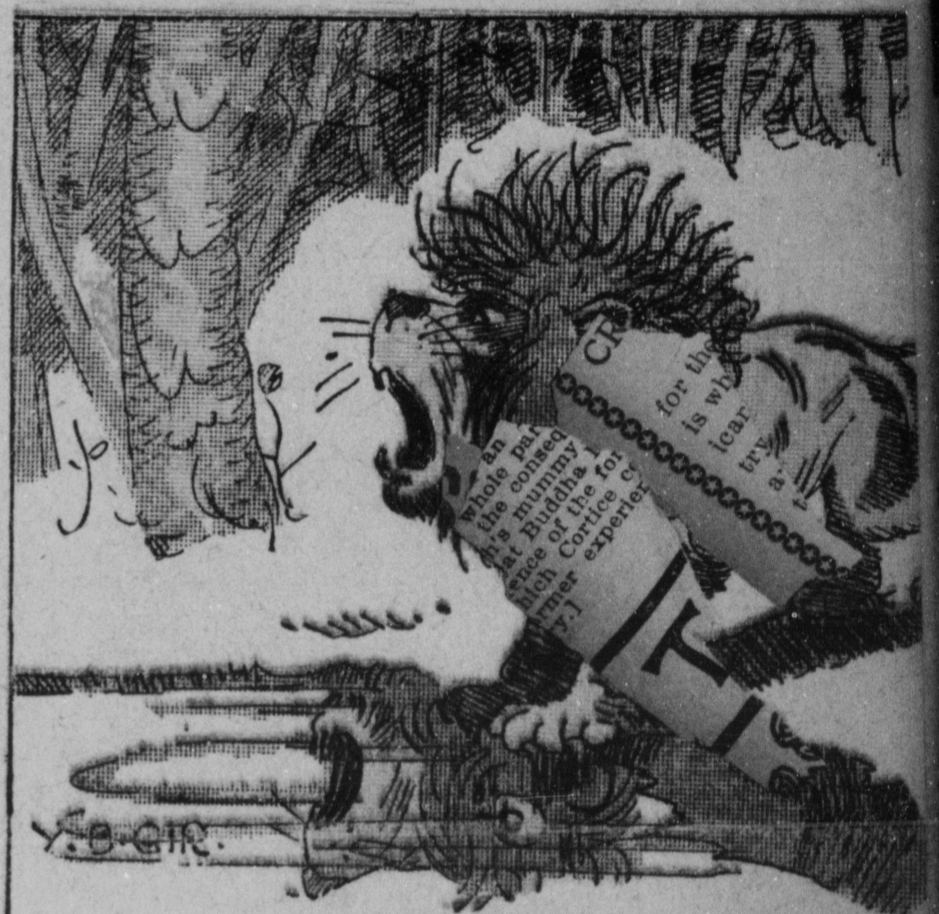

THANKING HIM THE BALD-HEADED MONKEY RETURNED AND BEGAN TO APPLY THE PRECIOUS FLUID. WHILE DOING WAS HORRIFIED TO SEE BENEATH HIM A LARGE LION WITH JAWS

THE TREE-HOME BEING SMALL THE LITTLE FELLOW WAS MUCH ALARMED, AND IN HIS EXCITEMENT HURLED THE COCONUT, STRIKING AND DRENCHING THE LION'S HEAD WITH THE WONDERFUL HAIR GROWER.

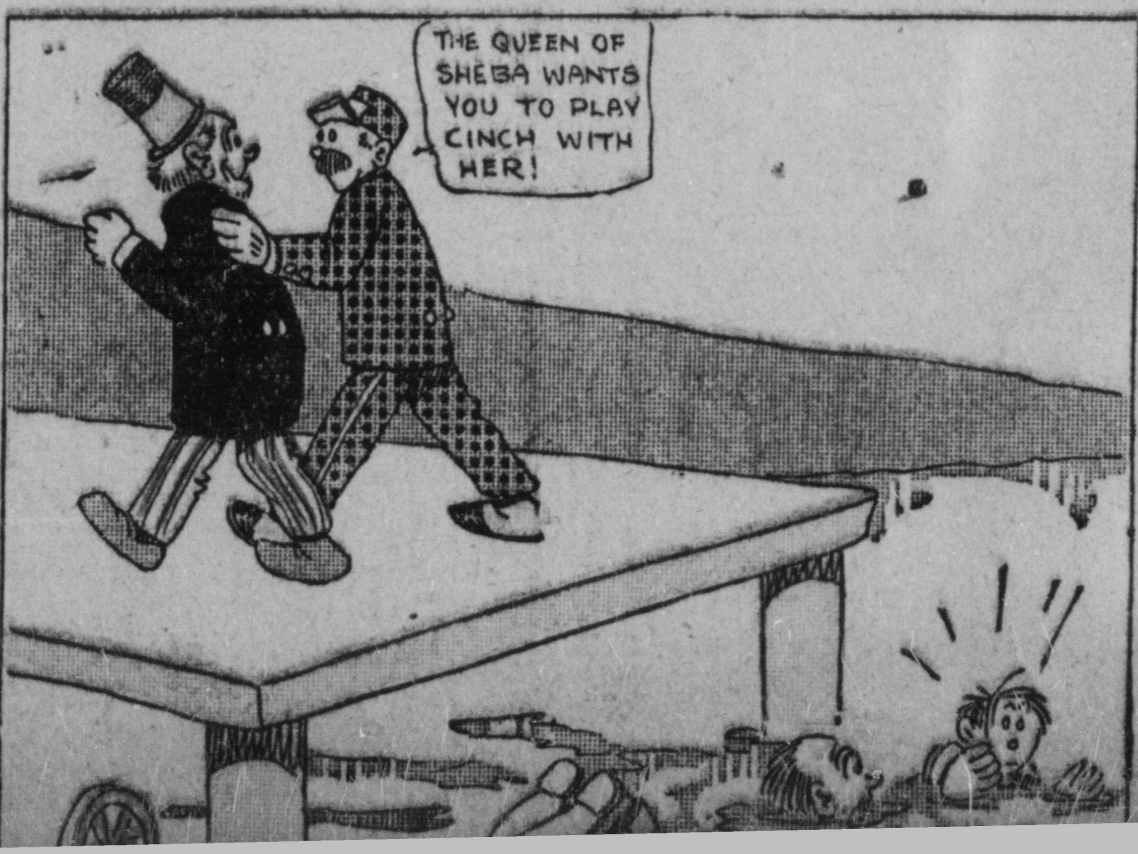

THE LION WORE NO MANE AT THIS TIME, BUT SHORTLY AFTERWARD HIS HEAD WAS BIG AND BUSHY. THE POOR LION WAS MUCH WORRIED AND FOR DAYS MOPED IN SILENCE THROUGH THE FOREST.

BUT SEEING HIS REFLECTION IN THE POOL ONE DAY HE GREATLY PLEASED WITH HIS CHANGED LOOKS AND ROARED DELIGHT. AND SO THIS IS THE BEGINNING AND ORIGIN OF LION'S MANE WHICH HE WEARS TO THIS DAY.

SURE, BUD SMITH HELPED THE POOR MAN

"O, Oi see," said Catfurr.
